Military Action in Waziristan: Opinion Poll Gilani Poll/ Gallup Pakistan

Islamabad, November 3, 2009

A recent Gilani poll conducted during the last week of October 2009 by Gallup Pakistan shows Pakistani public's views and perceptions on the military action in South Waziristan.

Support for the Military Action: 51% support it, 13% oppose it and a significant 36% are unsure.

People Responsible for the Operation: Only 25% blame Taliban whereas majority hold America and Pakistan's own government responsible (35% & 31% respectively); 8% blame the Pakistan's Army, and 1% gave no response.

Effectiveness of the Operation: 36% are hopeful it will bring peace, 37% believe it will worsen the situation and 27% are unsure.

Whose War is it? 37% say it is Pakistan's own war, 39% believe it is Americas war, while 22% think that both Pakistan and America have shared interest in this war.

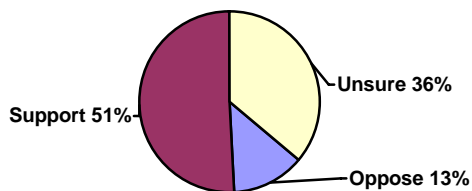

According to this survey, there is a cautious support in the Pakistani public opinion for the military action currently underway in South Waziristan against the Taliban. Fifty one percent (51%) support it, 13% oppose it, while 36% say they are unsure. But while a majority supports the military action against the Taliban insurgency, only a small number of 25% hold them responsible for the crisis that has called for military action, the remaining place the blame on America and Pakistan's own government and politicians, almost equally slapped on the two of them: 35% on the United States and 31% on Pakistani government and politicians, 8% put the blame on Pakistani army and 1% did not respond.

Will the military action bring peace to the area and improve the situation? Public opinion is sharply divided on this question: 36% believe the situation will improve, 37% believe it will further deteriorate, while the remaining 27% say they are unsure.

The sharpest change from previous surveys is on the question of whose war is it, Pakistan's or America's? Public opinion is still divided on the issue but many more consider it Pakistan's own war compared to a year ago. In the latest survey 37% consider it Pakistan's own war, 39% consider it America's war but a sizeable 22% consider it to be a war in which Pakistan and the US have shared interest and 2% did not answer. In 2008, only 23% considered military action in the North to be Pakistan's own war.

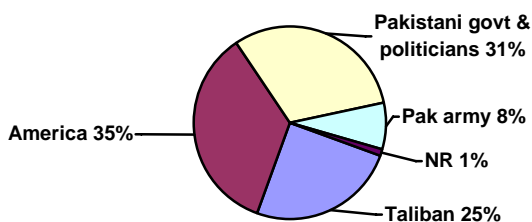

More details of the survey will be analyzed and released later in the week.
