One Third of Pakistanis View Globalization Favorably, the Rest Are Divided; Half of Them Believe Foreign Investment Has a Positive Impact: GILANI POLL/GALLUP PAKISTAN

Islamabad, June 26, 2009

According to a Gilani Research Foundation survey carried out by Gallup Pakistan, while the majority of Pakistanis (35%) have favorable views about globalization, a sizeable percentage think it is neither good nor bad (28%) or simply have not formed a view yet (24%). Despite this ambiguity, more than half (52%) deem foreign investment to be valuable for their country's economic progress.

A nationally representative sample of men and women from across the country were asked, "In your view is globalization good, bad, or neither good nor bad for our country?" majority of respondents (35%) said globalization is good while only 13% think it is bad for the country. Twenty eight percent (28%) of the respondents consider globalization to be neither good nor bad for the country. Twenty three percent (23%) were unsure and 1% gave no response.

However, follow up question about the impact of globalization shed more light on views about the process. When the respondents were asked whether foreign investment has a positive influence on the economy or is it harmful, more than half, (52%), believe it to be beneficial. Twenty one percent (21%) claimed that foreign investment harms their economy; where as 27% of the respondents were unsure about their stance.

Not surprisingly views about globalization are proportionately more positive in urban areas than in rural areas. A higher percentage of urbanites consider globalization (44%) and foreign investment (56%) to be good for the country as compared to the ruralites.

Commentary:

Global opinion polls in other less developed countries in the past have shown similar results. Commenting on it, analysts at Gallup Pakistan say: It is quite interesting and revealing that public opinion among working class in rich countries is opposed to globalization while their governments and elites are favorable to it. The situation is different in poor countries. Here many among the elite are suspicious of globalization but among the average people, support exceeds opposition.
